Sasha Forbes

A Connected Future: Centering Equity and Justice on the Path to Environmentally Sustainable Communities

G. Sasha Forbes, AICP, Senior Program Advocate, Resilient Communities, Healthy People & Thriving Communities. Sasha Forbes is a Senior Program Advocate on the Resilient Communities team in the Healthy People & Thriving Communities program at the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC). She provides capacity-building and technical assistance to communities focused on equity, inclusion, and sustainable community-building strategies. She collaborates with local and national partners on initiatives that aim to provide people and communities with solutions for affordable housing, multimodal transportation, resilience, and jobs while centering equity and the environment. Sasha currently works on the Strong, Prosperous and Resilient Communities Challenge (SPARCC), a new initiative influencing policies, programs and data integration into community-led solutions for racial equity and better climate/environmental and health outcomes in Atlanta, Denver, Chicago, Memphis, the Bay Area and Los Angeles. Prior to joining NRDC, Sasha worked for Reconnecting America in Washington, DC where she focused on federal, state, and local policies to integrate land use, transportation, and housing. Sasha holds a master's degree in urban and regional planning.
