Hello, colleagues.

Cincinnati, OH 45207

3800 Victory Parkway

Kandi Stinson, PhD, CTE Faculty Director and Professor of Sociology
cfte@xavier.edu

Any Questions?

Surprises in Remote Teaching

We know that time is at a premium, so to assist faculty with remote teaching in courses to remote teaching and the extension of the spring semester by one week, many of us are likely to be already preparing our summer courses at the end of the spring. We are providing the summer courses to faculty as the virtual sessions are being offered, and if you are interested in developing a course, you may wish to contact us. We are also offering a new webinar, a message from IT regarding Respondus and student assessment. As we approach the time for final course assessments, a new resource has been added to the Instructional Continuity website to provide resources and support for remote teaching. The webinar will cover academic honesty and Canvas exams and assignments. A link to the webinar is provided in the course materials. The webinar will also cover the Canvas remote exam tools and support from ID&T and DMS.

For putting final exams or assignments in Canvas, you will find information on an upcoming webinar, a message from IT regarding Respondus and student assessment. Canvas, a link to faculty discussion boards for sharing your ideas and asking for help. Support from ID&T and DMS are available to provide support. Below are their contact information and links to faculty discussion boards on remote teaching.

Technology Needs

Weber, Applications, and DMS are available to provide support. Below are their contact information and links to faculty discussion boards on remote teaching.

Courses

In addition, IOCD (Introduction to Online Course Design) is being offered in mid-summer. This course is open to any faculty interested in developing a fully online course. IOCD is a six-week online course that supports faculty in developing their first online course. The course will continue to be enhanced over the coming weeks. The course will cover topics such as course design, online learning strategies, assessment, engaging students, and more. Email Amy at gardnera3@xavier.edu with questions.

Support for Putting Final Exams or Assignments

As we approach the time for final course assessments, a new resource has been added to the Instructional Continuity website to provide resources and support for remote teaching. The webinar will cover academic honesty and Canvas exams and assignments. A link to the webinar is provided in the course materials. The webinar will also cover the Canvas remote exam tools and support from ID&T and DMS.

Instructional Continuity Website

New Remote Exams Resource Page on the Instructional Continuity website

The new resource page on the Instructional Continuity website provides links to faculty discussion boards on remote teaching.

Template for summer remote courses

Weber, Applications, and DMS are available to provide support. Below are their contact information and links to faculty discussion boards on remote teaching.

Canvas, a link to faculty discussion boards for sharing your ideas and asking for help. Support from ID&T and DMS are available to provide support. Below are their contact information and links to faculty discussion boards on remote teaching.

Support for Remote Exams and Assignments

As we approach the time for final course assessments, a new resource has been added to the Instructional Continuity website to provide resources and support for remote teaching. The webinar will cover academic honesty and Canvas exams and assignments. A link to the webinar is provided in the course materials. The webinar will also cover the Canvas remote exam tools and support from ID&T and DMS.

Remote Exams resource page

A link to the new Remote Exams Resources page on the Instructional Continuity website is provided. The page includes information on how to use the templates and put course information into Canvas. Librarians will be available to assist with the resources and support.

Surprises in Remote Teaching

Weber, Applications, and DMS are available to provide support. Below are their contact information and links to faculty discussion boards on remote teaching.

Contact

Any Questions?

Kandi Stinson, PhD, CTE Faculty Director and Professor of Sociology
cfte@xavier.edu

Any Questions?