

Ignatian Leadership

Reflection

The scripture of Luke 12:48 holds a significant meaning in my life. It emphasizes the importance of being responsible for what we have been given. It reminds us that if we have been blessed with talents, wealth, knowledge, time, and other resources, we should use them wisely and in a manner that benefits others. This verse serves as a reminder that we have a duty towards society to make a positive impact and help those around us. Life is not just about accumulating wealth or knowledge, but also about giving back to others and making a difference. So let us strive to fulfill our responsibility by using our blessings to make the world a better place.

In this series of classes, I was able to fully understand the significance of being a leader at Xavier, fully enveloping myself in the values on which the university was founded.

Humble Leadership

Having humility does not make you weak or submissive. It takes great courage to admit when you don't know something and to be open to learning from others. A humble leader recognizes and values the contributions of their team members, giving credit where it's due.

To be a humble leader, you need to possess a blend of admirable traits such as empathy, openness, and self-awareness. A humble leader can put the needs of the team before their own ego and prioritize collaboration, respect, and trust. Humility is not about being submissive or weak, but rather, it is a quality that inspires others to follow and work together towards a common goal. By fostering a culture of mutual respect and support, a humble leader can create a positive working environment where everyone is motivated to succeed and grow.

Application

Reflect on what we have been given., the opportunities that we have to change the lives of others to help better the world around us.

Samuel Terry

Director of The Center for Diversity and Inclusion